Peg-interferon (Peg-IFN) and ribavirin (RBV) are potent combination therapy for patients with hepatitis B virus (HBV) infection. It has been reported that Peg-IFN reduces the rate of HBeAg seroconversion and HBsAg loss in hepatitis B e antigen (HBeAg)-positive patients and prevents relapse in HBeAg-negative patients. However, the impact of patients' baseline demographic factors, including age, sex, body mass index (BMI), viral titers, and HBeAg status, on the therapeutic outcomes in Peg-IFN/RBV-treated patients has not been systematically analyzed. This study aimed to investigate the risk factors predicting clinical outcomes in patients with chronic hepatitis B treated with Peg-IFN and RBV. A total of 196 patients treated with Peg-IFN and RBV were enrolled. The baseline characteristics of the study group were compared according to clinical endpoints in the study population. In univariate analysis, age, BMI, HBV-DNA levels, HBeAg status, and duration of therapy, not sex, were significantly associated with HBeAg seroconversion, HBsAg loss, and sustained virological response (SVR). In multivariate analysis, age and BMI were significant independent factors in HBeAg seroconversion (OR 0.986, 95% CI 0.977-0.994; OR 0.964, 95% CI 0.941-0.987), whereas HBeAg seroconversion was not significantly associated with HBeAg loss and SVR. These data suggest that patients' age and BMI were significant and independent predictors of treatment outcomes in chronic hepatitis B patients treated with Peg-IFN and RBV.Q: React.js
