The vote would be held at the start of next year and include popular majorities in two-thirds of the states, she said on Sunday. Merkel's CDU is in talks with the pro-business Free Democrats, who have agreed to take a half-million Syrian refugees if their party can become Germany's biggest. Merkel made the comments in a speech to the editors of Germany's largest newspapers. She said:

"Germany needs a nationwide majority view on this question. "And the question should be: what kind of country do we want to remain? "The majority of people who were already our friends are still our friends. "But if we want a Germany in which it is clear that this question is addressed, then our task has to be to reach a majority view nationally as soon as possible. "And that means that a majority of state governments must all agree on the question of where they can then at the start of next year bring the question to a vote." Angela Merkel calls on conservatives to reject populist clamour over refugees Merkel has set strict asylum-seeker rules, which will allow non-EU countries to take in 20,000 refugees this year, as well as allowing Germany to assess each case on its merits. The rules were agreed by Germany's three main states, and were designed to discourage people from seeking asylum in Germany. They were passed by the Bundesrat - Germany's upper house - on Friday. EU leaders will discuss the issue in Brussels next week. Last week, Merkel, facing increasing pressure from her conservative base, said she will "carefully consider" whether to introduce quotas of refugees in Germany. She said at the time that the country had accepted more than 1.1 million asylum seekers since the start of 2015. The comment came after a meeting with the CDU's youth wing, Generation C, which came under fire for saying in a Facebook post that Germany was set to let in "as many immigrants as possible".Q: Push notifications iOS 9 (Local and remote) - how to check for notifications locally?
